I am of the view that the implementation of health and safety arrangements on site for 2012 was very satisfactory, both in terms of the prior planning (through, for example, the Safety Advisory Group) and the on-site control (largely provided by the excellent, competent contractors EEP). Exhibition contractors were better prepared and advised this year, and the standard of health and safety compliance gained therefore was high. The number of incidents and accidents was remarkably low taking into account the complexity of such an event and time pressures faced. The commitment and diligence shown by the organisers is of a high standard. The care taken to learn from each event is demonstrated by the range of review meetings to be held in the coming weeks, which we are actively involved in.
